New software – Supplement

On-screen menus

Your television has been equipped with new software and possibly hardware. This results in new functions and features which are described in this supplement. The supplement only describes major differences compared to the Guide you originally received with your television.

The main changes in your television are in the on-screen menus and menu layout. However, new functions have also been added.

Instead of black bars on each side of the menu, the television picture is shown to the right.

Standby options

Your standby options have changed compared to those mentioned in your Reference Book.

When you register a set-top box in the CONNECTIONS menu, you can select 'STANDBY OPTIONS' for your set-top box. This means that you can select if the connected set-top box should switch to standby automatically.

The options are:
OFF AT SOURCE CHANGE … The set-top box is switched on when selected, and off when another source is selected.
OFF AT TV STANDBY … The set-top box is switched on when selected, and off when the television is switched off.
ALWAYS ON … The set-top box is always on and never switched off.
MANUAL CONTROL … The set-top box is not switched on and off automatically. You switch it on manually by means of the remote control.

HDMI Expander

With the new software update, you have the possibility of adding additional HDMI sources. You can at any time enable or disable an HDMI Expander connected to the HDMI C socket.

If you set the HDMI EXPANDER in the CONNECTIONS menu to YES, the HDMI-C option in the AV menus is replaced with HDMI-C1, HDMI-C2, HDMI-C3, and HDMI-C4.
